Advisory Action Before the Filing of an Appeal Brief

Part of Paper No. 04052005

Applicants argue that there is no motivation in the prior art or in the knowledge generally available to one of ordinary skill in the art to modify the teachings of Fujishima in order to meet the limitations of the claimed invention. The examiner respectfully disagrees. Willson clearly teaches that polymers comprising the generic formula of figure 1 serve to provide dry etch-resistance and thermal stability (c. 15, I. 1-28). The examiner maintains the position that one of ordinary skill in the art would have been motivated by the teachings of Willson to incorporate recurring units having a cycloaliphatic backbone into the exemplified resins A, D or H of Fujishima with the expectation of improving dry etch-resistance, thermal stability as well as sensitivity, adhesion and solubility. This position is further supported by the teachings of Okino et al. (US 6303266 B1), which teaches that in order to improve dry-etching resistance of a resin, cycloolefin compounds (i.e., norbornene) are conveniently used as comonomers (c. 15, I. 8-10). The examiner is of the position that it is well known and conventional in the art that cycloolefins, which include compounds having a cycloaliphatic backbone such as those taught in Willson, are used as comonomers in resins in order to improve dry-etch resistance. The examiner maintains the rejection of record for the said reasons
